

Andrea Pilati

Born in [REDACTED] he attended the University of Siena, where in 1981 he graduated summa cum laude in Economic and Banking Sciences.

At the end of 1982, after serving his year of compulsory military service, he started working for the Bank of Italy in the Supervision Division of the Siena Branch: he also participated in on-site inspections. He subsequently moved to the Banking and Financial Supervision Area in the Head Office in Rome, where he first prepared the reporting and supervisory rules for direct and indirect credit control instruments and worked on the problems of special credit.

In the early 1990s he was appointed to the Banking Groups Supervision Department and worked on the privatisation process, the restructuring and rehabilitation of the Italian banking system, and the first models for risk measurement: he was also involved in financial innovation operations and established "early warning" procedures for risk analysis. From 1998 to 2006 he was Head of the Division that supervised the major banking groups. From 2006 to 2008, as Head of the Methods and Procedures of Supervision Division, he coordinated the production of the new Guide on Supervision.

After a short period as a senior manager in the Banking Groups and Supervision Department, in 2009 he was appointed Deputy Head of the Supervisory Regulations and Policies Department, where he also coordinated the revision of the rules deemed necessary in the wake of the 2007-2008 financial crisis and the implementation of the new international rules on capital assets (i.e. Basel 3).

On 27 January 2014 he was appointed Head of the Regulations and Macroprudential Analysis Directorate.

He has represented the Bank of Italy on many occasions at national and international level: he participated in the Basel Committee on prudential risk control and was a member of the expert groups within the European Council, most recently for the establishment of the single supervisory system within the "Banking Union" project. He was a member of the Bank of Italy - Consob Coordinating Technical Committee and worked on the banking supervision technical assistance project for Russia and Egypt.

Within the Financial Stability Board he is a member of the Steering Group that coordinates the work on the resolution of cross-border banking crises.

He is the author and co-author of publications on banking and finance.
